Our Living Standard

CAUSE: The Patrick Am Leader monthly plant paper of the Appomattox Garment Company, carried the following editorial in its March issue. Permission has been asked and granted to reprint it here so that our readers may read it.)

We have all heard, read and discussed living standards to a point where the very root of the topic may have been forgotten. The American standard is today compared to current foreign levels with reasonable conclusions. Our current standard is, however, being measured by the American standard of twenty years ago with some doubting.

Debate on this subject is too often elevated to a plane that few of us understand, so this discussion will attempt to confine the question to basic facts. To begin with, let us compare our current standard with European levels. We have command tively high earning capacities in this country with equally high prices. Europeans have a similarly high cost of living without the comparable net earnings; thus leaving them with a materially lower standard of living.

Now let us compare our current position with our own position of twenty years or so ago. Back then we had lower earning capacities and equally lower prices to pay for our purchases. On the surface, it appears that even though we are earning more, the fact that we are paying more balances this out. How come, we ask, do we have such things as refrigerators, automobiles, washing machines today, yet we did not have the opportunity to acquire these possessions years ago? It is not the more money we are earning inasmuch as the increased prices have substancially absorbed this. It must necessarily be boiled down to the one new factor that has been introduced; namely, the expanded individual credit made available to all of us. "Time payments" and the rapid development of the "personal finance" or "small loan" businesses may well be the answer.

Take a refrigerator for instance. Today we buy one for $200.00 and pay $20.00 per month out of our income until it is paid for. Back twenty years ago, a comparable piece of equipment may have cost only $150.00. Even though our income was one half of what it is today, the price of the item was also one half, so actually we should have been able to afford it then, equally as well as we can afford it now.

We were unable to afford the $150.00 cash back then just as we are unable to afford the $200.00 today. But today we can buy on "credit" whereas then we could not.

Technical improvements have often been credited with improving our standard. In a way this is correct, but not wholly so. Scientific improvements have made a Ford automobile a great deal better than the low priced car of twenty years ago. The relative value of . Ford has not changed, however, in relation to other cars. If we were able to afford a Ford twenty years ago, and all other factors remained the same, we still can buy a Ford today. The 1951 model, however, is by far superior to the 1931 vintage, but so it is with other brands of equipment, also.

Now that we have taken full advantage of the one big helper to a higher living standard, namely free credit, how can we keep increasing our level? The answer to this question may lie in today's comparison between American and European standards. We have the much higher level because our individual productivity is so much greater. For us to continue to improve our position, we must therefore continue to increase our true productivity. Increased earnings that are not accompanied by increased productivity only go to make for higher prices. On the other hand, increased earnings that are accompanied by increased production allow for prices to remain as they were or even to become lower, thus giving us more real money to buy what we want.

A sober understanding of this balance could very well be the answer not only to our individual economic problems but also to those of national scope. If the costs of running the government were discussed in terms of individual departmental efficiency rather than in terms of billions of dollars, the federal budget problems may be solved, as was very adequately suggested in the Hoover Report.

We are today too much interested in dollars and not sufficiently interested in values. This is not only a fault of the individual and industry, but also of our government. "WE" are our government so let "US" do something about it. If we don't: be sure nobody else will.

STILL GOOD

In looking over our files, we find that a year ago we commented upon a plea by State Senator Harry F. Byrd, Jr., that members of the General Assembly had to consider too many bills during its short 60 days in session. The popular Winchester solon noted that at the last session 1,200 bills were introduced.

Senator Byrd recently addressed a Richmond civic club, and he made the point again. We are still with him. And we venture to state that so many of the bills are passed that the state code is too bulky.

Modern society demands many regulations. It can get worse. But the system for enacting laws should be modernized too; and we do not think that acting on 20 bills a day for 60 days hand-running is the answer.

The Democrats Should 'Draft' General Eisenhower In

In my weekly radio broadcast last Friday night over WWOD, I stated that the Democratic Party had one of its greatest opportunities to elect a winning ticket in 1952. The reverse of the 1948 campaign appears certain. Last time out, the Democrats were divided as between the National Democrats and the Dixiecrats. Truman, but precious electoral votes were lost in the South. It appeared that the cleavage might become permanent.

But now the picture has changed. It is the Republican Party that is divided. One wing of the GOP desires Senator Taft as the standard bearer, and has the basic following of ex-president Hoover, Senator McCarthy and other powerful leaders of known political experience. Another group wants a more progressive ticket, and heads up under the leadership of Governor Thomas E. Dewey, Governor Earl Warren, and a dozen or more senators. This group would like to see General Eisenhower drafted for the nomination. Republicans traditionally get together by conventions time, but it now seems likely that there will be differences in 1952 to make a solid GOP front hard to achieve.

How can the Democrats cash in on this situation? Simply by presenting solid backing of a truly national ticket.

So let us face facts. There is the probability that President Truman will NOT be a candidate in 1952. The recently adopted 22nd amendment would tend to work against him in a campaign, and we could list many reasons why only an unforseen emergency would persuade him to try for another term.

To me, the answer is simple and obvious.

The race in 1952 should find the DEMOCRATIC Party united and dynasuic and enthusiastic with a winning ticket for General Dwight Eisenhower for President, and Chief Justice Vinson for Vice-President!

The point can be raised: But Eisenhower is not a Democrat. And the point can be answered by stating Eisenhower is a great American, with the ability as an administrator is not excelled, and that part of his greatness that he is a statesman rather than a politician. He could accept the Democratic nomination for easier than he could accept the Republican nomination, for he has guided the formation of many policies of the present administration and knows the intricacies of government from years of experience in dealing with the Congress and federal agencies.

There are many who feel that the great general does not aspire to the Presidency. They feel that it would be nothing short of a "draft" that would induce him to accept. Then, let us get busy and build the solid grass roots draft among united Democrats!

If General Eisenhower were going to yield to anyone's "draft" it could hardly be to be the candidate of a badly divided Republican Party, with large segments of its established leadership antagonistic to known views of the general.

And then, there is Justice Vinson. A towering American, having the confidence of all and the experience in government to lend balance and poise to a championship ticket.

The time is near. The course is clear. Unite behind proven leadership. We need the prestige and the skill of Eisenhower to build a team for peace, prosperity and

HISTORY OF A NUT
THAT IS NOT A NUT

(The Tidewater News of Franklin)

The peanut came to Southampton County indirectly by way of Spain and Africa. Following the pata of Columbus across the ocean, Spanish adventurers in the 16th Century saw the Peruvians roasting peanuts, grinding them into butter and making confections of them just as we do today. In Spain the "nut that is not a nut" grew and flourished, acquiring the name "Spanish" as a result. Carried from Spain to Africa and there cultivated, it became known as the "goober" African dialect for ground nut. Finally the peanut reached the United States in ships hauling slaves. Being the cheapest food obtainable for human freight. Thus it entered the South, where its cultivation spread rapidly. And Union soldiers, takine a fancy to the palatable peanut, caused it to become popular throughout the North. Today 14 states in the South and Southwest comprise the peanut belt, whence "goobers" are shipped to every corner of the country.

THE KICKOFF

(By Barbara Johnson)

This week the news of A. H. S. is very sad. The girls basketball team lost to Bedford by three points in the tournament at Gretna last Thursday. But don't give up hope yet. Our boys are playing in Invitational Tournament at R. E. Lee this Friday night. Since the boys have proved their ability to win we are really counting on them for a victory.

That's not all, though. Our '51 baseball team starts practice next week as most of us are able to tell by the way Coach Gordon Bragg is working on the diamond. We are looking forward to this season and hope it will be the best ever.

The eighth grade presented a play in chapel Wednesday, entitled, "The Earth is Flat."

We hear that "Sonny" Martin has been accepted at Hampden-Sydney College.

We thank Mr. John Caldwell for showing "Treasure Island" Monday afternoon to the school children.

Mrs. Franklin, of Hollywood and daughter spent Thursday with her daughter, Mrs. Joe Goin.

Traffic Accidents

Traffic accidents at home killed civilians nearly three times faster than American soldiers died in action on Korean fronts during the first six months of the war. Warning that the automobile death toll will seriously impede the defense program for 1951 unless the entire nation takes immediate action to reduce it, authorities estimated that about 19,500 persons died in street and highway accidents in the last six months of 1950. During the same period about 6,200 Americans were killed in action in Korea, according to defense department reports.

Five more killed on Virginia highways last week-end.
